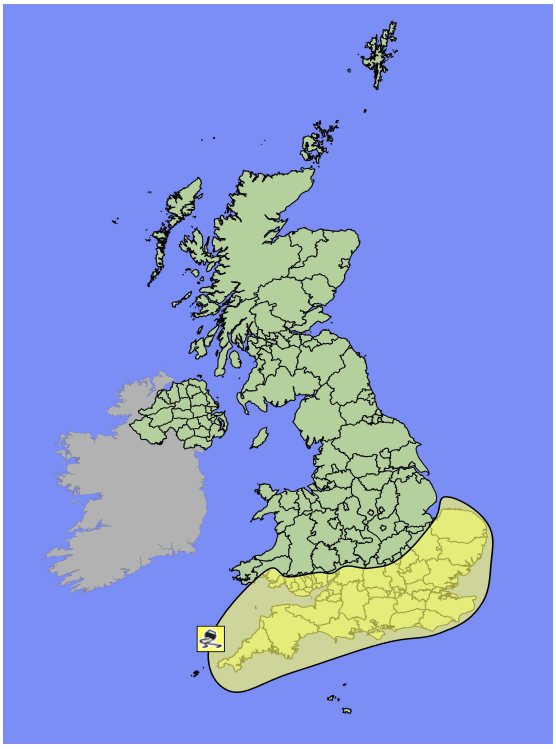
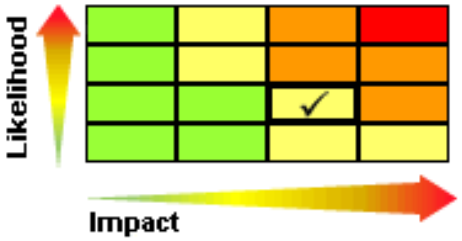
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Icy stretches are expected to develop across parts of southern UK during the early hours of Monday. In some areas these icy stretches will be the result of snow having fallen or partially melted during Sunday. However, over parts of southwestern England a frontal system arriving from the west may bring further rain, sleet or snow early on Monday, and this may lead to icy stretches on a more widespread scale. In addition further outbreaks of sleet or snow may extend east across southern areas although there remains considerable uncertainty regarding the extent of this. Please monitor the website for further updates to this warning.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 00:05 on Mon, 21st Jan 2013 until 23:59 on Mon, 21st Jan 2013

Sub-zero overnight temperatures will lead to ice forming where snow has fallen or melted during Sunday. In addition there is the risk of further localised snowfalls of some 1-3 cm in places during Monday with a low risk of as much as 5 cm. The public should be aware of the risk of disruption to travel during this continuing spell of wintry weather.
